LOCKOUT / TAGOUT AND HAZARD CONTROL

Due diligence requires employers to advise workers of all potential hazards. Organizing lockout supplies and properly labelling equipment can save lives.

Employees are far more likely to follow procedures if equipment is labelled and supplies are easy to locate when needed.

Buying proper lockout equipment is just the first step in a lockout/tagout program.

Adequate training, developing procedures, and tracking compliance are mandatory elements of your hazard control program that are required by law.

There are many potential energy sources that can cause critical injuries or even death if not locked out properly. Ask a professional for help in determining the most practical lockout device for your needs.
